Agriculture - one of the most promising and profitable sectors of the economy of Ukraine. Fertile soils allow not just completely feed the population, but also to export more than two-thirds of the crop to countries around the world. Since ancient ages Ukrainian land it represented value for neighboring countries that had a higher economic and military potential, and this made use of.

Of course, the main wealth - land, has not disappeared, but the policy of the government towards the development of agriculture makes it impossible to use it to the fullest. Now engaged in agriculture are more private companies interested in their own profit, hiring season for a certain number of workers. And no matter where they are, the main thing that they were professionals. Of course it is difficult to condemn for such of logic, in their view it is absolutely correct policy.

This is the problem of this village - it became unnecessary. Previously, it was uncomfortable to live in one place, work in another and return home. This was done by chumaks and various workers, but not the farmers and their henchmen, for which the farm and the house is almost the same.

Now most rural infrastructure, unlike cities, develop flank that there is not even their own schools and hospitals. And if you're the father of the family, especially large, you have the choice not great - live in poverty, or to move his family to the city where they have to work and wife, and thou in winter season. And now there is another fairly common option - to go to work in another country

In fact, the need for village nowadays is a philosophical question. On the one hand - old traditions of our country, and bring them to most simply unacceptable. On the other hand - to support rural state, later we see is going. And then the question is - and whether you need it the most people?

The concept of the village as a way to maximize the use of agriculture does not work, has no need to have to provide a number of village economies with its workers. Maybe - once the concept of the village will be completely rethought, and it is not just an appendage to the farm, farm, or something similar. There is no guarantee that one day Ukraine will not make a step towards tourism, with its national parks, sanctuaries, nature reserves, and then to the village has earned a new target - and content with it and life.
